James Le Gros, Enrico Colantoni and Lacey Chabert will star in the indie "Sherman's Way,"

Le Gros

which is being directed by "Rhapsody in Bloom" helmer Craig Saavedra.

'Sherman's'

The story, from a script by Thomas Nance, is set in California's Napa Valley and centers on an eccentric Olympic has-been (Le Gros) who prefers leisure to work and finds himself stuck with a rigid, pre-law Yale student (Chabert) who has no time for wasting time.

Between skinny-dipping and stealing cars, this odd couple learns that balance is the key to finding love, getting the job and getting a life.

Brooke Nevin and Michael Shulman round out the cast.

Saavedra is producing along with Shulman through their recently formed Starry Night Entertainment.

Le Gros' credits include "Enemy of the State," "Drugstore Cowboy," "Point Break" and "Living in Oblivion."

Colantoni, best known for his TV roles on "Just Shoot Me" and "Veronica Mars," also has starred in "Galaxy Quest," "The Wrong Guy" and "Artificial Intelligence: A.I."

Chabert, who starred on the TV series "Party of Five," most recently appeared in Paramount Pictures' "Mean Girls."

Starry Night Entertainment has a string of projects in development, including "Moscows" by playwright Gary Sunshine; "Mothers and Sons," which is being adapted by Paul Hond from his novel; and "Any Night," a thriller being penned by Daniel Arnold and Medina Hahn. ■
